

FREAKY PLASTIC SURGERY

PUTTY-FACED Barry Manilow

needs to stop – NOW

TAKE a look at Barry Manilow and you'll know why they call it PLASTIC surgery!

The singer has had so many procedures that his face looks bizarre and molded, and a leading cosmetic surgeon warns he should stop before he looks "even odder and more unnatural."

The ENQUIRER has exclusive information that the singer has had at least five major procedures. He underwent a face-lift in 1995, another face-lift along with upper and lower eyelifts in 2003, a full eyelift in 2004, plus an additional face-lift in 2006 – as well as regular Botox injections.

"And that's just what we know of!" a music insider told The ENQUIRER.

"Even by celebrity standards, Barry is carrying his cosmetic upkeep to an extreme."

The ENQUIRER consulted Detroit-based plastic surgeon Dr. Tony Youn, who concluded the entertainer "appears to have had too much plastic surgery."

"Overdone plastic surgery occurs when a person looks fake. The best plastic surgery is work that looks natural and doesn't stand out as the first thing you notice.

"It should do nothing more than make a person look young for their age.

"WHEN SOMEONE LIKE BARRY, who is 61, tries to look like he's in his 30s, you know too much plastic surgery has been done."

Dr. Youn, who has not treated the performer, added: "Barry should not have such tight, shiny, smooth skin. It's unnatural-looking and likely a result of face-lift surgery combined with excessive Botox and chemical peels or laser treatments.

"His eyelids are too open, and create a somewhat effeminate look.

"I also think he might have had fat grafts, as his face appears to have regained the fat which is typically lost as a person ages.

"While Barry's neckline and lower face look good, I believe that if he continues to have more and more work done, he will only succeed in looking even odder and more unnatural."
