

CHER

At 62, Cher is still performing to sell-out Las Vegas crowds, and her face appears remarkably free of lines. Dr. Tony Youn says Cher has “very few wrinkles on her face, possibly a consequence of Botox.” The plastic surgeon, who has not treated the music icon, adds he would not recommend further cosmetic procedures for her. “A woman Cher’s age should have at least a few wrinkles to make her look naturally youthful instead of unnaturally operated on.” Cher has admitted only to having her nose reshaped, breasts enhanced and teeth straightened.

Hollywood BOTOX BOOM

Who ADMITS it? Who DENIES it?

LIGHTS! Camera! Botox! The use of Botox is so common in Hollywood now that stars of all ages are getting injections to improve their looks – and perhaps save their careers. Both showbiz men and women are temporarily erasing wrinkles with injections of the controversial drug made from the same family of toxins that causes botulism – a life-threatening form of food poisoning. It works by blocking nerves or freezing muscles. Few actors admit using Botox, but here are some top stars, uncovered by The ENQUIRER, who get help to defeat Father Time.

MADONNA

At 50, it isn't easy keeping up with the “American Idol” generation of perky singers. Health fanatic Madonna's fountain of youth includes regular Botox injections to her face. And Madge doesn't use just any old Botox, but an alternative anti-aging treatment called Mesoeclat that is injected through a micro-fine needle. She receives up to 50 injections at a time at a cost of up to $1,000 a session.

VIRGINIA MADSEN

Virginia, 47, is one of the few actresses who admits to getting Botox injections twice a year. “I use Botox!” the “Sideways” star happily proclaimed – but warned the anti-aging product should be used in moderation. “I am not using these injectables to look 25...I just want to look like me.”

BEFORE

BRAD PITT

For the past five years, Brad, 45, has been getting Restylane – a wrinkle-erasing filler made in Sweden. The ENQUIRER has previously reported on Brad's big-ticket beauty regimen, which includes a $1,400-a-jar moisturizer. Now it looks like he may be getting even more help. The eternally youthful partner of Angelina Jolie denies having cosmetic surgery, but plastic surgeon Dr. Stephen Grifka says the actor “may have had a combination of Botox and fillers, but it looks natural.”
