GWEN STEFANI is reuniting with her old band — and their summer tour plans have thrown her household into turmoil.

Those close to the 39-year-old pop singer/fashion icon and her rocker husband Gavin Rossdale, 41, fear that Gwen's amped-up career with her band No Doubt could damage the couple's six-year marriage.

"Gwen just gave birth to their second son in late August, and she will be taking on way too much with a new album and a world tour next year," an insider told The ENQUIRER.

"SHE'S ALREADY RAISING the boys, keeping up homes in Los Angeles and London, working on her clothing line L.A.M.B., and wants to start recording the first No Doubt album in seven years.

"A world tour will put too big a strain on the family."

Solo artist Gavin also believes that Gwen should put their sons — Kingston, 2 1/2, and 4-month-old Zuma — and him before her band, according to the insider.

"Gavin feels they have more than enough money, and he doesn't understand Gwen's motivation for getting back on the road," explained the insider.

"It's not like he wants her to give up her career, but he thinks a few years focusing on their boys is what's best for the family. He's also worried that a lengthy tour will cut into the quality time their relationship needs to thrive."

Despite that, Gwen is making plans to tour the world with her 22-year-old band.

"Gwen thinks it will be great fun to pack up the kids and nannies, and play music with her No Doubt bandmates. But that leaves Gavin relegated to being Mr. Mom," confided the insider.

"Gwen's told him that they should use her phenomenal earning power while they can and that once the boys start school, they'll settle down as a family.

"But Gavin can't help but think that a multimonth tour with Gwen onstage nightly will hurt the family and their marriage."
