

JENNIFER LOPEZ – desperately worried about her pregnancy – secretly called in a doctor to stand by during a recent concert, sources say.

“Jennifer’s abdomen has been expanding so quickly it’s giving her really bad pain. During the concert, she was unable to get down from the stage and freaked out,” a source told The ENQUIRER.

After their Oct. 19 performance, J.Lo’s husband Marc Anthony called a doctor who rushed to their Los Angeles home and gave her a complete checkup.

“THE DOCTOR TOLD HER SHE was doing fine considering the stress she’s under. He gave her a vitamin B-12 shot and told her she needed to get some rest,” said the source.

Fearing a miscarriage, 38-year-old Jennifer had the doctor attend her concert the next evening in Anaheim.

“He sat at the side of the stage in case she had another episode of cramping. Fortunately, she suffered no problems,” said the source.

Despite looking very pregnant and wearing loose, flowing outfits, J.Lo had yet to publicly confirm her pregnancy by the time she’d concluded her concert swing through southern California.

The ENQUIRER was the first to report weeks ago that she was finally pregnant after years of trying. Sources have told us that she’s expecting twins – a boy and girl.

But the couple’s concert tour has been marred by her fear of miscarriage.

Meanwhile, Jennifer has been cranky from the stress but she’s also found happiness by indulging in her favorite guilty pleasure – M&M’s!

by ROBIN MIZRAHI

A very pregnant J.Lo serenades hubby Marc on Oct. 17, during their concert tour

Miscarriage fears lead J.Lo to add doctor to concert crew