

bers of the white supremacist Aryan Brotherhood prison gang and were being kept by Noel and Knoller.

One day, 123-pound Bane broke free from Knoller and brutally attacked the 5-foot-3, 110-pound Whipple, savagely tearing out her throat as Hera ripped at her clothing. Police found the dying lacrosse coach in a pool of blood. She died five hours later in a hospital.

Bane was immediately put to death, and his grandpups were born a month later. While Murphy was horrified by Bane's attack, she insists his descendants are sweet.

Neighbor Lee Bower agrees. "These dogs are lovable. I come over every day to say hello. They'll kill you with love, but they'd never attack."

Murphy desperately wants to find takers for her 50-pound puppies before Animal Control pays her another visit.

"The Times yanked my ad after readers complained, so I have no way of finding them homes," she tells GLOBE. "I will give them away, if someone would just take them. I don't want them put to sleep. They are sweet and loving and they don't deserve to die."

- ROBIN MIZRAHI