

Family desperate to get LINDSAY INTO REHAB

TERRIFIED she'll die an early death, friends and family of wild child Lindsay Lohan are desperate to get her into rehab.

The 20-year-old actress is still spinning out of control following her cocaine and multidrug overdose at a Los Angeles hotel Nov. 12 – a story exclusively reported by The ENQUIRER in last week's issue.

The "Mean Girls" star continued her downward spiral with a disastrous drunken stint as host of the World Music Awards (right) and a crazy bender in London. Afterward, her manager-mother Dina attempted to rally family and friends for an intervention when Lindsay arrived back in the U.S.

"The problem is Lindsay won't stand for anyone talking to her about her alcohol and drug use. Anyone who tries to, she just cuts them off, and then out of her life," a friend told The ENQUIRER.

"People close to her are just standing around helplessly as she rides off the rails. They're seriously concerned that she's going to OD and die."

Last week, The ENQUIRER reported exclusively that the hard-partying star overdosed on a deadly cocktail of cocaine and painkillers, and had to be revived by a doctor who was called to Hollywood's Chateau Marmont, where Lindsay's lived for the past year. Lindsay's drug stash included Vicodin and Dilaudid and nitrous oxide.

But just two days later, Lindsay arrived in London ready to party, says another source close to the actress. "At the WMAs, Lindsay demanded four bottles of Grey Goose vodka and four bottles of champagne to be sent to her dressing room – and before long, she was drunk out of her mind," said the source.

Observers at the British awards show say the actress wasn't able to remember her lines and fell when she walked onto the stage. When the audience began heckling, Lindsay walked back off the stage – and didn't return.

"LINDSAY DIDN'T CARE ABOUT messing up the awards – all she cares about is indulging her desire to party," said the source.

The WMA producers quickly scrambled for other presenters to fill in for Lindsay, who stayed backstage where she nabbed some items from the "gifting room," including an aquarium of live goldfish to be shipped to her home and a pair of designer sunglasses.

Lindsay's troubles continued throughout her stay in London, caused a scene at one club where she skipped out on her $1,000 bill. She "lost" the $38,000 bracelet she borrowed to accompany her outfit for the awards – which she'll have to pay for. She crashed her car into a police car.

Added the friend: "Lindsay is stubborn and out of control. At this point, her loved ones feel if they forcibly put her into a treatment facility, she's going to crash and
