

'You're a has-been!' Lindsay screamed at ex-pal Tara Reid on the track toward stardom.

At the 2004 Teen Choice Awards she picked up four awards — and for her upcoming movie "Lady Luck," she'll earn more than $7 million.

But an ex-friend told The ENQUIRER: "I don't think Lindsay has become a nasty person just because she's so successful. I think she's always been that way!"

FAN ABUSE

The ego-bloated teen has even been mean to some of the adoring fans who flock to her movies.

A few weeks ago The ENQUIRER revealed that Lindsay made two kindergarten-age girls cry when they tried to approach her in a restaurant — telling the waitress to keep them away from her table.

And Lindsay blew off an admiring fan at Las Vegas' Palms Casino Hotel recently when she was asked to pose for a photo.

Lindsay was exiting a party with a drink in her hand when she reportedly railed at a startled fan, "Get away or I'll kick your ass right here."

Another ugly incident involving Lindsay's fans came while she was out shopping with Wilmer in late July.

"Lindsay and Wilmer were at the trendy Kitson clothing boutique when three 12-year-old girls recognized her," said an eyewitness.

"They were so sweet. They told her they were visiting Los Angeles and had never seen a celebrity before, and asked if she would pose for a photo with them.

"Lindsay turned her back to them, grabbed some clothes from the rack and went straight to the dressing room without acknowledging them. They were crestfallen.

"Lindsay then told one of the salesgirls, 'I need some privacy. I need you to close the shop for me.' So the manager asked everyone to pay for their stuff and leave, and Lindsay got the store to herself.

"It was a classic case of seeing a star at her worst."

'LIKE DIRT'

The former friend added: "In her speeches after winning awards, and in interviews, Lindsay always thanks her young fans, saying that without them she wouldn't be where she is today.

"But she's unappreciative of her young fans. She treats them like dirt.

"The bottom line is that Lindsay can be one of the cruelest, nastiest stars going.

"The girl needs a big wake-up call!"
