

Liz rushed to ER after overdose

She's mixing booze & prescription meds – SAYS INSIDER

ENQUIRER EXCLUSIVE

ELIZABETH TAYLOR is boozing again – and she was secretly rushed to the hospital by ambulance after accidentally overdosing on one of her many prescription drugs, sources tell The ENQUIRER exclusively.

The 76-year-old Hollywood legend, who's been mixing alcohol with pills, had been vomiting and couldn't breathe when she awoke her assistant at 4 a.m. on April 6 at her Bel Air home, according to insiders.

"Liz was panicking. She really thought she was going to die," a close friend told The ENQUIRER.

"She's on a ton of doctor-prescribed medications, and she has trouble keeping them all straight. She thought she'd taken an overdose of one, but couldn't remember which one."

The star was rushed to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center by ambulance after her live-in assistant called 911.

"Liz believed that she'd taken too many pills, and had no idea which one she might have overdosed on. She also said that she might have taken too much of more than one."

A source confirmed that Liz was admitted early Sunday morning and went home that afternoon. The official word is that she went into the hospital for 'dehydration,' but it's much more than that, a longtime friend of the Oscar-winning star told The ENQUIRER.

The actress – who's done two stints in the Betty Ford clinic for addictions to pills and booze – has been tossing back vodka too, divulged the source.

"At night, she drinks vodka and water, although sometimes she'll just have straight vodka on the rocks," divulged her longtime friend.

"She's also a terrible insomniac, and I think she's developed a heavy tolerance for her sleeping pills. Add drinking to the mix – and sooner or later, someone is going to find Liz dead from a drug overdose."
