banquette, she stepped onto a table. But suddenly she collapsed and landed on the floor.”

“The last thing I saw were her red high heels going over her head,” added the source.

“Mary-Kate lay in a heap on the floor for a few seconds. Then she tried to pick herself up. It was strange, but not one of the four guys she was with offered to help – not even the guy she was kissing just moments earlier!

“SHE STRUGGLED TO PULL herself up. But she’s so thin and frail-looking that for a second I thought she wouldn’t be able to do it. Finally, she did – and after seeming to struggle for a while, she sort of plopped onto a couch.”

Two nights later – on Wednesday, Feb. 7 – another insider says that Mary-Kate was back at Bungalow 8.

The source said Mary-Kate – who’s worth $137 million as co-owner of Dualstar with her twin sister Ashley – sat in the same club in the same booth and was once again surrounded by male friends.

“This night,” the source told The ENQUIRER, “she was much more subdued.”

“SHE WAS BUNDLED UP IN A black sweater, black leggings and black boots with a huge fur vest wrapped around her. She sat on the banquette with her legs curled up next to her.

“A guy was sitting next to her, and she was making out with him off and on.”

Unlike her sister Ashley, Mary-Kate dropped out of New York University after just one year, but she’s continued to hang out in trendy Manhattan hot spots.

“Ashley is rarely seen in clubs with Mary-Kate. It seems they’re becoming more and more different as they get older,” said the source.
