secondary to an implement of some sort."

Pagnotta said Mary-Kate's injury happened ages ago but The ENQUIRER discovered that the mystery cut first appeared in late May.

Despite her wealth and fame, Mary-Kate — who began her freshman year at college this fall — has suffered through some emotional traumas recently.

Her latest movie, "New York Minute," bombed badly, she's still being treated for anorexia and her romance with David Katzenberg is in the rocks.

"What I think no one really gets about Mary-Kate is how desperately unhappy she is," a close friend told The ENQUIRER. "Fooling around with insane ways of dieting is one thing when you're in middle or high school. But for it to get to the point that she needed rehab as an adult is very serious.

'This injury appears to be a linear laceration, possibly secondary to an implement of some sort.'

"She hasn't taken to school; she has no hobbies. She might have a lot of fans and a twin sister, but she's very lonely.

"Mary-Kate just isn't the same girl I used to know.

"She used to be fun-loving and outgoing. But now she seems really down, as if the dark, depressing side of her personality has taken over."
